the act of the German submarine commander in the sinking of the Arabic and the taking of American life, it night to be realized by Germany that nothing more is being demanded of that country by the United States than ght to be expected. It has repeated-disregarded its obligations under ternational law; it has not been guided by the promises which it has made to this country; it has set up a series of excuses for its acts which neither satisfactory nor acceptable; it has pursued a course in this regard which does not convince that nany is sincere, and what this stry wants is some conclusive evience that Germany does not back up such acts as have been committed its submarines and that can be riven through a disavowal of them. If Germany does not approve of uch acts it is high time that it said and in such a manner as to assure not making promises which it can-brawl from under at the first opportunity. That is where this country stands. Naturally enough those who are in der of Leo Frank, even though they the crime, are anxious that it should be forgotten. They do not like the publicity which has been and is being given to it, inside as well as outside the state of Georgia. They realize that it is through keeping the affair to the front that public septiment is going to be aroused to the point, where in time it will demand that such disregard for law and order must such disregard for law and never nappened to make them.

FROM LUCILE'S DIARY

I went forthwith to the kitchen, and set Thelms, the maid, to work on blarching afmonds. I was glad to find that there was a large supply of them in the storeroom, because we should have to treble the recipe.

"Aren't we lunching today?" asked Mr. Bates, laying down his paper and looking at his watch as we all sat on the porch. "Do you realize, my dear, that it's half past one?"

Mrs. Bates, looking astonished, hurried to the kitchen, followed by Gertrude, and about fifteen minutes later the gong sounded. I went forthwith to the kitchen, and "What was the matter?" I whispered fairs which disgraces the citizenship of the state.

Much is apparently being said which is not pleasing to the advocates of the mob spirit. Their ideas and work are being shown in a light which is

I don't believe that I should have accepted Gertrude Bates' invitation to Applegate if I had known that her mother keeps only one maid, because housework in a summer home is even worse drudgery than in the city. But, on the whole. I had a fairly good time and am not sorry I went.

The first part of my visit I rested most of each day, for I thought it would be a relief to Gertrude not to feel that she had to entertain me, and then I always believe it is wise to selse opportunity that offers to take long naps in country air. By the end of the week when Carl Bates drove out from the city I was feeling so wonderfully fit that I was ready for anything.

Thet's have a party to-night," I suggested "and invite all' the summer colony."

Don't you think it will be more work than pleasure?" asked Gertrude who showed surprisingly little interest in entertaining for me.

"Til be glad to take charge of the refreshments." I said. "We needn't have anything but cake and los cream. I know, a perfectly delicious kind of almond cakes we can have."

"Of course," I assured her, for I think that any one who can read can cook, and I was not afraid to try them, though I had never happened to make them. Lucile?"

"No, the almond cakes we can have."

"Is it one of your mother's recipes!"

"No, to copied it from Frances Marsdelland and the started the make them. I had never happened to make them. Lucile?"

Unfortunately the stupid baker had closed his shop before Carl got there, and we were obliged to content our-selves with crackers to go with the ice cream. The suspicion is increased by the maintenance of the commerce and indistries of the United States."

This is a view which gives first consideration to the United States and that is where it belongs. Upon the success of the loan depends the amount of business which this country can get from European countries at war, and this is not confined solely to munitions of war but to all exports of products from factories and farm. Unless such a credit as is proposed can be established it means that american industry is going to suffer, and such a suffering would give no health to the Teutonic allies. It would simply mean that the supplies would be obtained elsewhere. It is impossible to overlook the opportunity which such a loan gives for keeping our goods before the work!

I Still Praise Peruna.

Peruna is undoubtedly a splendid medicine for the stomach. A great many people after years of searching for a remedy finally try Peruna and are cured. This remedy is especially helpful in cases of weakness of the stomach. Those who prefer to take tableta instead of liquid medicines can get Peruna Tablets.
